Dear Sirs:

I would recommend that the DOJ stop any further action against Microsoft and accept the settlement. I have been involved with computers for 24 years and decided long ago it made sense to go with Microsoft products beginning with MS-DOS. They have developed good products with excellent support and training. They have empowered the home computer user to expand his vision and utilize tools that previously were beyond his expectations and without effort to learn programming in order to achieve immediate success. Microsoft has done more to advance human knowledge and productivity than any single corporation has in the technical age.

Many of the plaintiffs exhibit greed and envy in their comments and actions while trying to get the government to grievously impair a competitor when their primary damage is to their egos.

The attorneys in the federal government, states, and some individual corporations have used this venue to enhance their own public images, which is such a waste of public money. You have a settlement; take it and get on to matters that are more important.

Thank you,
Jack Jenkins
